Savory Beautiful Swimmer

By Sam Irwin

The clear salt water bubbles noisily as it re-circulates through the rows of water tables at James Bright's open-air Harvest Seafood dock in Erath. Inside each aquarium, specimens of Callinectes sapidus, better known as the blue crab, swim happily in the filtered water.

The Latin name, Callinectes sapidus, which translates into English as "savory beautiful swimmer," is appropriate for the succulent crustacean because there are few things in life that are as attractive as a pile of seasoned crabs boiled bright orange on a Louisiana picnic table.

Bright, a Florida transplant, can't seem to buy enough of the big-clawed creatures.

A fisherman by trade, the entrepreneur observed several soft-shell crab operations in his native state and figured he could maximize his profits if he harvested enough "red-liners" in his daily catch.

Red-liners, also called busters, are crabs that are about to molt. A thin black marking line along the rim of the crab's hind-most paddler swimming legs begins to turn pink or red. It's an indication the crab is about to shed its shell and become a valuable soft-shell crab. Bright can get upwards of $28 a dozen for the soft-shell crab delicacy.

"I originally started out trying to keep the red-liners alive long enough to molt," Bright said.

A blue point crab at James Bright's Harvest Seafood in Erath is in the process of "backing out" of its shell (above). Bright displays the underside of a male crab (right). The return water of Bright's saltwater operation is first cleaned by a decidedly low-tech crawfish sack filtration device (below).

"I've been doing this 14 years, but that first year learning the technology, I killed just about everything I put in the water."

One of the mistakes Bright made was adding too much salt to the water pumped into his tanks from a nearby deep well.

"You don't need to make the water taste as salty as you think," Bright said.

It was hard to pinpoint exactly what he was doing wrong.

"I called a friend in North Carolina who has a couple hundred tables," Bright said.

"He couldn't make it work. I had a small system then, only 10 tables.

"I told my wife to leave me alone while I drained and cleaned everything. I started measuring my salt exactly and installed a water meter to know how much water I was putting in there. When I got it right, I haven't changed it since."

But when Bright has a lot of red-liners, he knows the valuable crabs crave a little extra salinity. To satisfy their need for salt, he'll load a 1,500-gallon tank onto the back of his truck and drive down to Cameron to siphon off some genuine Gulf of Mexico water for his little monemakers.

"It takes a little bit more concentration of nature to get the soft-shells to work," he explained. "You can't match nature. I tried sea salt like you use in aquariums. We tried all kinds of salt.

"But if you get your water to taste like it does out in the ocean, it's too much

Fun Fact:

The way to tell the sex of a crab is to turn the crab upside down and examine the segmented abdomen. The crab's belly fits snugly into a groove on its underside. If the abdomen is long and slender and resembles an inverted "T," you've got a boy crab. An immature female has a triangular shaped abdomen while a mature female's is rounded.

salt. You got to add just enough salt where they can live, but I guarantee you it's not as much as See Crabs, continued page 2

it is out there.”

So what kind of salt do Vermilion Bay crabs prefer? Morton's? Diamond Crystal? Rock? Water softener salt? Iodized?

Bright is cagey and laughs when the question is posed.

“Let's just say any kind of salt will work, but it can't have any additives,” he said.

“Some salt has additives to keep it from caking up and other things. It just can't have any additives.”

As Bright mastered the saltwater technology, he expanded his soft-shell crab operation, but a lean year of buster catches forced him to re-think the business.

“I decided to start buying and selling hard-shell crabs,” Bright said. Without investing a lot of dollars into large walk-in coolers and freezers, Bright found that by keeping all of his catch alive, including the hardshells, he could get top dollar for clean, purged crabs.

Talk of mastering technology amuses Bright. His facility is nothing more than a ramshackle open-air covered pavilion with a series of plastic pipes re-circulating filtered water.

“I have a sixth-grade education,” Bright said. “And it took me eight years to get that.” He laughs at the memory, but he knows that clean, filtered water is crucial to the crab's well-being.

“You have a problem with ammonia from the crabs excreting in the water, but it's all filtered out,” Bright said.

The water also gets dirty when new crabs, trapped daily in the Vermilion Bay, White Lake and Cypremort Point, are dumped into his holding tanks. The clear water immediately clouds with silt and other pieces of debris clinging to the bottom feeders.

When Bright designed his filtration system he was definitely thinking low tech. Crawfish sacks are attached to the exhaust end of his four-inch drain pipe.

“That takes care of the big pieces of debris,” Bright said.

He points to a large fiberglass tank embedded in the levee of his stocked fishing pond. (He also allows people to fish for catfish in the pond for a small fee.) The top of the fiberglass tank has been sliced off to allow placement of three dams of filtration devices. The filtration dams are nothing more than several stacked crawfish sacks filled with oyster shells, lava rock and other porous materials to cleanse the brackish water. Occasionally he drains the water tables to clean the filters with a high pressure hose.

“The water filters keep out any floating bad particles,” Bright said. “Bacteria grow on the rock and eat the nitrates and the ammonia.”

In addition to cleaner crabs, which the public likes, Bright is able to start stockpiling choice crabs on Wednesday for the busy weekend trade. It also allows him to get premium prices for his product. He gets $18 a dozen for large crabs and even more for select. Folks who want to economize and pick and clean their own crab meat for gumbos and stews can buy small to medium crabs for $6 a dozen.

He buys and sells crabs year round, a fact he advertises heavily on his homemade signs in the Erath countryside.

The keep-'em-alive system also works for crawfish, Bright said.

“People like to buy clean crawfish,” he said.

Bright's water system was contaminated, killing his entire stock of live product, from the storm surge of Hurricane Rita last year. However, he has the saltwater technology mastered and simply drained and cleaned his do-it-yourself filters and resumed business quickly.

His 83-year-old father, Harold, and brother, Harold Jr., all help in the business. Harold is also a crabber and plies the open water as weather permits.

In addition to the live product, Bright established a crab picking facility in Leroy this year to process leftover small crabs that do not sell in the live market. He also plans on building a fish market alongside his crab shed and a waterside restaurant

Salt water recirculates through Bright's tanks. Each tank holds about a half-crate of crabs (inset at left). He sells naturally purged, live select large, medium and small-to-medium hard-shell crabs as well as soft-shell crabs (above). Bright and a fisherman dump a box of newly-trapped crabs into the saltwater holding tanks (below). Although the clean water is muddied by the introduction of the crabs, it is quickly filtered by the fast moving filtration system.

“People will be able to choose the crabs they want to eat,” Bright said

Bright said he enjoys the seafood business.

“I've always enjoyed fishing,” he said. “I can remember when I was three or four years old going out to the sandbar with a catfish head tied a piece of string and catching crabs.

“I had a fish market in Jacksonville more than 25 years ago and been in the business ever since. I like dealing with the public.”

populated with FEMA trailers housing municipal workers. While tourists visit raucous Bourbon Street, housing projects east of the stables remain empty. Except for the limited activity of the barn, the neighborhood underneath the Vieux Carré I-10 exit is a ghost town.

Stewart said recent violent thunderstorms make him nervous when he is alone in his travel trailer.

“Lafitte Street floods real easy,” Stewart said. “I'll get up and go upstairs in the office.”

And now that he lives on the stable premises, he seems to be working 24/7 taking care of the mules and horses.

“I've grown very attached to several of the horses,” Stewart said.

But Stewart appears tired.

His personal horse, Brandy, housed in a St. Bernard Parish stable during Katrina, was reunited with Stewart shortly after the storm. Every chance he gets, Stewart and Brandy travel to nearby horse shows to compete in pole bending and barrel riding events.

Stewart puts on full cowboy regalia and leaves his troubles behind when he's riding Brandy in the show arena.

“I'm replacing the trophies and ribbons I lost in the storm,” Stewart said. “It won't be long before I have a house full of ribbons again.”

Converse man sentenced for timber theft

The Louisiana Department of Agriculture and Forestry worked a timber theft investigation with officials from Harrison County, Texas, and the FBI that led to the recent sentencing of a Converse man, Agriculture and Forestry Commissioner Bob Odom said.

James "J.C." Hall, 67, was sentenced Aug. 8 in Federal Court in Marshall, Texas, to five years probation and was ordered to pay restitution of $208,254.76 to the victims of his timber theft scheme.

"I'm always pleased when one of the department's investigators is able to help a family get back what was wrongly taken from them," Odom said. "Our investigators, like Jim Baldwin who worked this case, take timber theft seriously and work with other law enforcement agencies and prosecutors to see to it that justice is carried out."

Earlier this year, Hall elected to enter a guilty plea on the federal charge of conspiracy to transport stolen goods in interstate commerce instead of going to trial.

Hall conspired with Harold Thompson, 49, formerly of Caddo Parish, to steal timber in east Texas and west Louisiana. Thompson fabricated timber deeds and then listed Hall as the person who cut the timber. The men shared the profits of the timber sales.

According to reports, a landowner in east Texas caught Hall and his crew in the act of cutting timber without permission and held them at gunpoint until authorities arrived. Investigators then spent about a year putting together the case against Thompson and Hall.

Thompson pled guilty to felony theft and was sentenced to three years in state prison.

The tracts of timber Hall pled guilty to cutting were owned by the Culvert family in Bossier Parish, and a business and family in Harrison County.

"Anyone suspecting they've been a victim of timber theft should call one of the department's district forestry offices immediately. The sooner our investigators get started on the case, the better," Odom said.

LDAF's Baton Rouge headquarters can also take timber theft calls and dispatch them to the appropriate district office, the number is 225-925-4500.

Charbonnet said. "But it took so long to get to Baton Rouge, it was too late to go back to New Orleans and get the rest of the horses. They wouldn't let us back into the city."

Charbonnet had no choice but to wait out the storm in the Capital City and hope for the best. At risk were the three stablehands left behind, Darnell Stewart, Lucien Mitchell Jr. and Fabien Redmund, three additional mules and 30 matched Arabians, Belgians and other draft horses.

By Wednesday, Aug. 31, 2005, flood waters from the 17th Street Canal levee break had washed over the backs of the smaller horses.

Stewart and company pushed, pulled, cajoled, pleaded and dragged the frightened equines through flooded streets to the nearby high ground of Leimann Park.

Stewart and Redmund were evacuated because of injuries. But Mitchell stayed with the herd to the bitter end, sleeping on the elevated portion of Interstate 10, along with hundreds of other desperate hurricane victims, until Charbonnet mustered a rescue trailer force a full week after the storm blew through.

One mule and two horses died from injuries sustained during the storm.

A full year later, the familiar rhythmic clip-clop of equine hoof beats sound in Jackson Square, on Decatur Street, along Royal and Bourbon Streets, too. It would appear that New Orleans life has seemingly returned to normal, at least in the French Quarter.

Stewart, who lost his 9th Ward home in the storm, is living in a tiny FEMA trailer on the grounds of Charbonnet's Lafitte Street stables. He said Mid-City Carriages began an abbreviated mule touring schedule in July.

"We have eight mules here," Stewart said. "But business is slow. The demand is down."

Stewart said they have also returned four carriage horses to take care of the limited wedding and funeral work. The antique horse-drawn hearse has been renovated and remains the only operating one in the state.

"We lost some carriages in the flood," Stewart said. "Others will need repair, but we're not going to fix them until demand picks up."

Stewart said Mitchell is residing in Baton Rouge, but wasn't sure of Redmund's whereabouts. Charbonnet relocated to Geismar, a river community in Ascension Parish.

Charbonnet's herd is also scattered.

"I've got some of the horses in Geismar," Charbonnet said. "But I still have some in Tennessee since the storm."

Charbonnet was only able to re-open his storm-damaged Charbonnet-Labat Funeral Home on St. Philip Street in July.

The Mid-City Carriages stables, located just off North Claiborne Avenue, are on the edge of the French Quarter. Stewart says few businesses have re-opened in the area and he is forced to go "across the river" to find a large supermarket.

unfortunately, she was on target.

"We lost more than $1 million and spent at least $300,000 to get back in operation," Newman deduced.

LSU AgCenter economists estimate the wholesale nursery industry in Louisiana suffered more than $19 million in losses from Hurricane Katrina and an additional $1 million in losses from Hurricane Rita.

Newman said she knows of only one nursery that went out of business because of the storm. She credited Folsom Nursery's success to the help from within the industry.

"You find out you have friends who are willing to lend a hand," she recalled. "We wouldn't be in business today if it wasn't for the help we got from Bracy's Nursery in Tangipahoa and Windmill Nursery in Washington Parish."

Newman believes business will be good for many of the state's wholesale nurseries for at least the next 10 years as homeowners and communities continue to rebuild. For now, she said, everybody in the industry, including horticulturists and landscape installers, seems to be busy.

"All across the Gulf Coast it will take a lot of trees and plants to replace what was lost," she noted.

Like Folsom Nursery, many others who sustained damage are doing fine for the time being, Newman said.

"This nursery got a lot more damage than others," she said. "But a catastrophe like this allows you to come back and set up the nursery just like you want it. We're adding bamboos and daylilies and will possibly add other shrubs and trees in the future. This was a life-changing event."

After Katrina, downed trees, pine straw and nursery pots covered the grounds at Folsom Nursery.

A year later, Louisiana comes back to life

Folsom Nursery

By Ashley Rodrigue

One year ago Folsom Nursery was battered and bruised by Hurricane Katrina but somehow the downed trees and scattered plant pots seemed to hide the true extent of the damage.

Fast forward 12 months and the same formerly wooded landscape is bare after extensive clean up and tree removal. Patches of grass and dirt and the unfinished frame of a greenhouse in progress dot the open acreage where hundreds of towering pine trees and thousands of potted plants once peacefully cohabitated.

The trees provided much-needed shade for the baby shrubs and plants so desired by southern landscapers and homeowners.

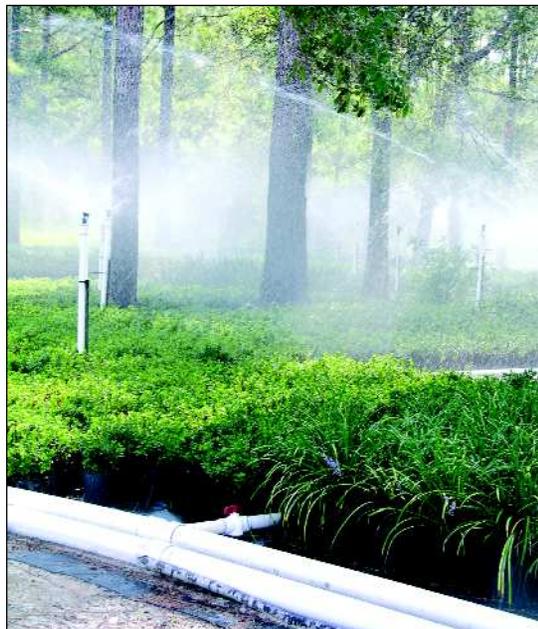

As Pat Newman, who runs Folsom Nursery with business partner Suzie Magee, surveyed the countryside along Louisiana Highway 40 on a hot August morning, she announced the rebirth of her part of paradise.

"It's amazing how quickly a year passes. We've been out here working seven days a week since the storm hit," Newman explained. "Folsom Nursery is now starting its second life."

The nursery is a source for beautiful azaleas, mondo grass and other Louisiana favorites. With the trees gone, Newman and her laborers are building greenhouses to protect the plants from too much sun. The first one is under construction and will measure 60 feet wide by 180 feet long when it is completed. Cuttings and starters, too small and delicate to make it outside, will remain in the nursery's original greenhouse structures.

In the weeks and months that followed Katrina, Newman and her crew emptied dead plants from the containers and counted what was lost, rigged an irrigation system to keep alive what was left and went about the business of reopening the nursery.

A solitary patch of trees was left after the blow downs were removed, so plants that survived the storm and new cuttings that were ready to leave the greenhouse were moved nearby and under their massive canopies. A new irrigation system has been erected to water the plants creating a tiny shaded oasis in the middle of an arid desert.

A new irrigation system was put in place after Katrina destroyed the old one (above). A hillside once covered with pine trees and container plants is now bare. Very few protective pines remain at Folsom Nursery to shade the shrubs and plants (below).

Although there is much work still to be done, Newman is excited about what has already been completed.

"We feel good about what we have accomplished. I am so proud of what our workers have done," Newman said. "Many of these guys have been working here for 20 years or more, so they have a stake in its success like we do. They were devastated and had tears in their eyes when they saw this place after the storm, but I promised them we would come back."

Newman hypothesized last year that Folsom Nursery's losses would total almost $1 million and See Folsom Nursery, page 10

Charbonnet's Carriages

By Sam Irwin

One of the most compelling stories to come out of the Hurricane Katrina disaster was the heroic rescue of Louis Charbonnet's mules and draft horses trapped in flooded New Orleans.

The mules of Charbonnet's Mid-City Carriages are a familiar sight in New Orleans. Daily, they trot through the French Quarter pulling wagons of tourists past the Cabildo, Antoine's Restaurant, Bourbon Street gin joints and the Napoleon House.

The mules are Charbonnet's most valuable equines because they work constantly for the old-time tour service. The horses labor mostly in short, light-duty wedding and funeral processions.

Charbonnet, a New Orleans native, had never evacuated the city during a hurricane, but hastily put together an evacuation plan for the animals two days before the storm.

"We were going to take a load of mules to Baton Rouge and come back for the horses later,"
